Beyoncé's number one hit song 'Crazy in Love' was covered in record time, becoming the first song to be made in under a week, a bit of music to start the party in 2016. In an incredible display of ballerina-like poise, choreographer Glen Goza turned this song, which will be released in an as-yet-to-be-decided format on the 10th anniversary of 'En Vogue' selling 16 million copies worldwide, into a ballet -- featuring dancers as characters from the song. The dancers were played by Jon Jon Briones, Brayden Gray, Tristan Frécourt, Mason Morreale, Cee Lo Green and Emily Kirk, who played a different character, depending on the musical key of the song. You did a good job of this as well, describing how the city manager has been resistant to these suggestions. You start this meeting by outlining several key differences between how the city manager leads and how you operate. For example, you mentioned that the city manager is employed by the city and is under contract to the public to do what they are hired to do, while you are hired by the public and do what they hire you to do. You also stated that you are held accountable for the results that come out of your department (as opposed to the city manager who is not held accountable for the results of his department). This began with you explaining that you are comfortable with the direction and the budget and the city manager is not. You describe how you have relied on the data in the budget to guide your decision making and how the city manager has relied on hearsay and rumor. This ties back to the point you made about transparency and the city manager's unwillingness to share data. You then begin to lay out three distinct areas in which you believe that changes are needed. For example, you mentioned that you believe that citizens deserve to know the people they hired, that they should have more data to work with when making decisions, and that they should be able to hold the city manager accountable for the results of his department. You also mentioned that you would like to work with the city manager and his staff to find new ways to operate and move forward as a team. At the end of your presentation, you made the point that you have already begun to guide city government in a new direction and that you are willing to work with the city manager on new ways to operate 6d1f23a050
